The Golden Journey to Samarkand

PROLOGUE

By James Elroy Flecker, author of "Hassan"

We who with songs beguile your pilgrimage
  And swear that Beauty lives though lilies die,
We poets of the proud old lineage
  Who sing to find your hearts, we know not why—

What shall we tell you? Tales, marvelous tales
  Of ships and stars and isles where good men rest,
Where nevermore the rose of sunset pales,
  And winds and shadows fall toward the West.

And how beguile you? Death has no repose
  Warmer and deeper than the Orient sand
Which hides the beauty and bright faith of those
  Who made the Golden Journey to Samarkand.

And now they wait and whiten peaceably,
  Those conquerors, those poets, those so fair:
They know time comes, not only you and I,
  But the whole world shall whiten, here or there;

When those long caravans that cross the plain
  With dauntless feet and sound of silver bells
Put forth no more for glory or for gain,
  Take no more solace from the palm-girt wells.

When the great markets by the sea shut fast
  All that calm Sunday that goes on and on:
When even lovers find their peace at last,
  And Earth is but a star, that once had shone.

HASSAN, by James Elroy Flecker, is the story of a sweetmeat maker who, by a turn of fortune, became the favorite of the Caliph of Bagdad, the lordly Haroun al Raschid, colorful figure of that book of romance, the "Sole, unparalleled Arabian Nights," as the poet Henley called it—

"The Book of Rocs,
Sandalwood, ivory, turbans, ambergris,
Cream-tarts, and lettered apes, and calendars,
And ghouls and genies .. .. .."

But "Hassan" is the Arabian Nights with a reverse twist, so to speak. Nor ghouls nor genies are in its pages, nor calendars nor lettered apes. Haroun al Raschid is a part of it, of course, his vizier Jaffar and his swart-skinned executioner Masrour; but the Commander of the Faithful is not depicted in the jocund spirit of the raconteurs of The Nights. The true Caliph; rather he is shown for what undoubtedly he was for all his estheticism, condescension, patronage and frivolity—a creature of fierceness and cruelty. And so while the play opens in a spirit of gusto and bustle and rich Oriental humor, gradually, almost imperceptibly, the subtone of tragedy becomes dominant, and Haroun is portrayed in "all his terrible symmetry." And so the newly-made favorite of the court, the humble tradesman Hassan, whom the Caliph, for the mere amusement it afforded him, had clothed in a robe of honor, turns upon his patron and denounces him for what he is—a tyrant. And Hassan is of course stripped of his honors, and he and Ishak, the young court poet, who has throughout befriended him, wander away from the lust and blood and cruelty of the Caliph's court to a city closer to their dreams. This city of their dreams is Samarkand—

"That name of names! That star-vaned belvadere
Builded against the Chambers of the South!
That outpost of the Infinite!"

The play ends with the already famous "Golden Journey to Samarkand." This last scene is laid at the great eastern gate of Bagdad. The caravan is ready to depart. Outside the walls is heard the tinkling of the camel-bells. The watchman of the gate appears.

The Watchman: "Ho, travelers, I open. For what land leave you the dim-moon city of delight?"

The Merchants: "We make the Golden Journey to Samarkand."

It is the perfect and inevitable solution of the play's emotional theme. Hassan and Ishak join the caravan. Hassan pauses for a moment at the gate, looks back at his old shop, at the balcony of his faithless light-o'-love, Yasmin, and then passes through. His last words are:

"Sweet to ride forth at evening from the wells,
When shadows pass gigantic on the sand,
And softly through the silence beat the bells
Along the Golden Road to Samarkand."

And the gates are closed. Only the women and the street idlers are left as the lights fade out on this lyric scene.

Adapting Play to Out-of-Doors

The production of a play like "Hassan" on an outdoor stage is a complicated piece of work. In the first place, the play was written for the indoor theater, where the shifting of its eleven scenes offers no especial technical difficulties. But it becomes a complicated problem to the outdoor producer, who has to work without a curtain and without painted scenery. John N. Hilliard, who will produce "Hassan," has already spent two months adapting this indoor play to the medium of the Forest Theater stage, in arranging the text and in devising a practical system of scenes so that there may be no undue waits between scenes and acts. In this work the producer has had the invaluable assistance of an exceedingly competent stage staff. This staff consists of Dr. Alfred E. Burton, Austin James and Arthur Vachell. Dr. Burton is chief of this staff, and those who remember his stage settings in the Arts and Crafts Little Theater during the winter season need no further word as to his ability as a builder of stages. Austin James, to whom has fallen the technical task of translating the producer's rough plans into workable blueprints, is an experienced artisan. In the last dozen years he has helped to build many of the Forest Theater's summer productions.

Fast Assuming Color

Arthur Vachell's fine discrimination from the artist standpoint will add another to his many former beautiful stages. Already he and Cornelius Botke, whose mastery of colorful design is in demand before he goes abroad in May, are bestirring themselves on the decor of the production. Jessie Arms Botke has made the colored plates for the costumes. These will be designed and made by Mrs. Rhoda Johnson and Miss Helena Conger, both of whom have proved themselves experts, and are engaged also to paint the colored plates, design and make all costumes for "The Cradle," the Forest Theater prize play to be produced by Mr. Hilliard and Miss Blanche Tolmie in the latter part of July. Lewis Josselyn and Richard Johnson will handle the lighting problem with their usual facility working en rapport with the subtleties of the Forest Theater. Make-up will be directed by Hobart Glassell, past master in this difficult branch of histrionic art. A spirit of community co-operation is behind the play throughout.

Advertising Men are Gratified With Success of Carmel Convention

Most of the visiting advertising men got away for their homes last Sunday. The delegates cannot say enough in appreciation of their visit here, and especially are they grateful to John B. Jordan, proprietor of Pine Inn, for his hospitality and care for their comfort and entertainment.

Saturday morning's business session was an interesting one; the luncheon at Point Lobos was a masterpiece and the dinner-dance was a joyous occasion.

The addresses at the dinner were well received and interesting. Sandwiched in between the facetious remarks of the delegates short addresses were made by Ray C. DeYoe, Herbert Heron, John B. Jordan and W. L. Overstreet.

The following letter is from the secretary of the association:

San Francisco, April 17, 1923

Editor Pine Cone: Be assured of the appreciation of the program committee and the board of directors of this association of your continued interest and cooperation in making the Carmel convention a success.

The holding of the convention will be exploited in advertising circles not only in California and all the coast but through national advertising publications.

Carmel's hospitality was delightful, and from its own standpoint I am sure it will have been worth while.

Yours very truly,
Norman F. D'Evelyn

San Francisco Realtors Will Play at Del Monte

The San Francisco Real Estate Board is going to have a big sports celebration and high jinks at Del Monte May 4 to 6. Some of the features planned are a three-day golf tournament, a special polo match on imported mounts, a baseball game and a number of other contests. It is expected there will be seventy-five or eighty invited guests from the Los Angeles Real Estate Board and one hundred and seventy-five or more from San Francisco and the Bay Cities. Carmel is on the visiting list of many of the delegates and their families.

Only Ten Montereyans Eligible for Training

Only ten young men between the ages of 17 and 24 years from Monterey county will have an opportunity to enjoy a month's vacation and training in ideal surroundings July 26th to August 24th at the Citizens' Military Training Camps at Del Monte and Fort Winfield Scott, according to announcement of quotas for the state just made by Col. E. V. Smith, chief of staff, 91st Division, Presidio of San Francisco, California, who is to command this year's camps and to whom inquiries and applications should be sent. Are there any young men in Carmel who wish to attend?

Baseball de Luxe Also a la Carmel

When the 8 o'clock whistle sounded last Monday morning, Harrison Godwin was awakened from a dream in which was re-enacted what happened to his Reds in Sunday's baseball game. There was no love wasted by Brother Fred and his Bearcats, who mauled, scratched, tore and mangled their way to a 19 to 5 victory.

To begin with, Harrison had everything his own way; he had a rooting section, Schweninger in costume and a big bass-drum. But it was all to no avail. His team-mates couldn't "hit 'em where they ain't," and his fielders made some bad bobbles.

These same teams meet again tomorrow afternoon and a battle royal is promised. The Herald cup for the winner and the Pine Cone cup for the loser will again be on exhibition in the press box.

"The ball grounds, James."

The Summer Outdoor Play and Scheme of Its Production

ducing a Forest Theater play is divided among many persons. The success of a production, therefore, depends upon these people working together, and under one directing head. This directing head is responsible for the nice adjustment of the parts so that they will fit without friction into the balance of the whole. He must put the parts together. He of all the working staff is the one who sees the production as a whole. He it is who must reconcile conflicting points of view. Necessarily the producer must have powers bordering on the autocratic, for however wonderful theories of art may seem, where the theater is concerned there is an axiom and one alone which must rule—the play must be under one directing head. There is no democracy in the art of the stage.

Personal to the Producer

John Northern Hilliard's many Forest Theater productions of the past ten years, culminating in the greatest achievement possibly both of himself and of that vehicle—The Yellow Jacket— have given him authority in matters pertaining to outdoor productions. As deduced from years of painstaking labor, while there was no precedent to follow he worked out a modus operandi whose ends prove its worth. He studies his theme until he knows not only its human and ornate vestiture but until he has lived in the mind of every character, and until the inner significance of the play becomes part of himself. Then he puts it over to his audience which is swept on with him as a unit. Thus he has grasped the psychology of the outdoor theater. As an actor he emphasizes all these grave points for success. The atmosphere, beauty of gesture and almost supernal beauty of setting must be sustained by dignity of language. All these he brought out in Pygmalion and Galatea, where he played the art critic and patron, Chrysos, and in the intricacies of that beautiful masque "Tusitala," by himself and Herbert Heron who was the real founder of the Forest Theater. Again in The Yellow Jacket as the Chorus his own dignity of gesture, opulence of voice and simple magnetic power were complementary to the play. Whether in Chrysos, the Chorus, or the astrologer in High Justice, it is all one of his suppressed powers of portrayal; and in Hassan, the part chosen for himself, there will be wide range for his ability and unusual poise, which presage deserved success attendant upon these new expressions of his exceptional gifts. Hassan, with the lure of forest setting, will be far greater than the indoor dream of its progenitor who still awaits its premier, and it is to be hoped will, from Somewhere, assist in its success to the last shadowfall.

W. L. Overstreet,
Carmel, Cal.

Dear Sir: Just a few lines to tell you how happily I am looking forward to my recitation in the Forst Theater on June 1. The wonderful inspiration, and, if I may say, affection, that I received when I sang in that bit of God's country, Carmel-by-the-Sea, has been one of the greatest tributes I have ever received for my modest endeavors. I have been and always will be most grateful.

Please convey my love to all my friends that are and friends to be.

With every kind and sincere wish to you all,

Most cordially yours,
IRENE PAVLOSKA.

Monday afternoon next the last of the "Alice Seckels" matinee musicales will take place in the colonial ballroom of the Hotel St. Francis in San Francisco at three o'clock. Many from the Peninsula will go to the city for the event. The only appearance of the marvel of the piano, Guiomar Novaes, will be in Miss Seckels' series. David Alberto and Mr. and Mrs. Fenton P. Foster will be among the Carmelites attending.

Youthful Essayists Compete in Humane Society Contest

AS part of the observance of "Be Kind to Animals Week," the Carmel Humane Society, with the cooperation of the school authorities, and in order to enlist the interest of children in kindly and humane treatment of animals, requested that the children write stories about animals, the prize to be publication in the Pine Cone. Fifty-one stories were submitted, and, after painstaking perusal, six stories were selected to appear this week. They follow:

HOW A HORSE SAVED HIS MASTER'S LIFE

By Elsie Keays
Age 11

The horse stamped in his stable. Why didn't his master come and feed him as he always did? Poor Star was getting uneasy in his mind. Yes, now he knew why his master couldn't come. He remembered last night he heard his master's voice when he was getting in a carriage and the day before he had been extra kind to Star. Besides his eyes didn't twinkle as they used to but looked very sad. When he tried to smile that sad look wouldn't go away. Yes, now he knew why his master was away and perhaps in danger, thought Star.

He neighed and stamped but still nobody came. Where was his master?

At last he couldnt stand it any longer. Star kicked open the door and was free to go to his master! He galloped straight ahead. Star didn't know where he was going, but something was leading him. An old farmer saw him and sold him to a soldier who was going to war.

Star was put on a train and stayed there till they were in France. The noise he heard was frightful day and night.

At last the train stopped in a dreadful place—a hospital. His new master was kind, but Star wouldn't obey. Something was on his mind—something was calling him. He rushed out of his stable, he didn't know where.

Bullets were flying everywhere, but he didn't see or feel them. Soon he came to a brook. There he saw men lying wounded on the ground.

Star walked among them sniffing, hoping to find his master. He gave a leap of joy! There was his master unconscious, lying on the ground. Star put his soft muzzle in his hand. His master slowly opened his eyes. His face showed his surprise and lit up with joy. He said, weakly, "I am about going, Star. But how did you get here?"

Star answered with a soft neigh.

"Star, oh Star, you can help me," he said weakly. "Lie down and let me get on your back."

But Star didn't understand, although he was intelligent.

"Lie down," the master commanded sternly. The master pulled himself on Star. They rode through the forest. Bullets were flying everywhere. Star was shot but not badly, and he ran on. Soon they came to the hospital, and Star dropped down exhausted. They were both soon well and went to their home. Star's master never forgot the kindness that was done to him by Star.

GINGER

It was in the English Academy in Poona, India that I first saw Ginger. That day I had been kept in with Ben Lo Hammond and Freckles Bates. As we came out of the classroom we saw a mongrel dog crouching against the dormitory wall. Suddenly we heard a snort and Gani, the mascot gazelle, charged the pup. Gani would have gored him to death had I not snatched him from in front of her.

Two months later we took the train for Nagpur where we were to spend the summer. Buddy was not allowed to go as the master said one mascot was enough. Just as the train started, Ginger dashed alongside. He jumped and I caught him. Now that he was on the train the master said he could stay.

About five miles from Nagpur is an old palace which Ben Lo, Freckles and I visited. We found some old bathing tanks in which we took a bath. Two weeks after our arrival at school again, Freckles remembered that he had left his new hockey stick at the palace of Nagpur. We persuaded the master to let us three boys, Freckles, Ben Lo and myself, go back and get it, so we took our lunch and boarded the train for Nagpur.

When we reached the palace we took a bath, then lay down to take a nap. Suddenly I awoke and, towering over me, was the largest Cobra I had ever seen, and I wished in my heart to be in the good old United States. There was a rush, and Ginger jumped over me at the Cobra. There was a movement, the Cobra struck, I fainted. When I became conscious Ginger was dead. The whole school mourned him.

OLD SPORTY AND SCAMP

By Mildred Rogers
Age 13

Once we were going to the mountains to spend a few weeks. My friend went with us. We had been in camp about four or five days and were settled. My friends and I went walking in the woods.

We came upon an old log cabin, when we heard something crying like a kitten. We went up to the window and looked in and saw two little wild cats and their mother. She was apparently dead for she looked stiff.

We finally went in and found that the mother of the two cats was dead, so we took them home. My friend took one as her own and I took the other. She named hers Scamp and I named mine Old Sporty. We kept them until they were strong for when we got them they were weak from hunger.

They grew to be so frisky that we had to put them into a kind of pen. It was large and was under a tree.

One day a cowpuncher came to our camp and when he saw the cats he wanted them so badly we gave them to him.

We went home five or six days after that. Later we came back to spend the week-end with the cowpuncher. The cats knew my friend and me right away and tagged us all around. Once we were walking around. A little snake came crawling across in front of us and the cats killed it.

That showed how they wanted to return the kindness we gave them.

"DO AS YOU WOULD BE DONE BY"

By Lexie Grant
Age 13

Betty Morris was a little girl who owned two pets, a cat, Binkie, and a dog, Dick. She was very thoughtless and often forgot to feed them. She teased Binkie and was unkind in many other ways also.

One night Betty had a queer dream. She dreamed that she had grown very small, while her pets were like young giants. All of a sudden Dick burst out laughing and said, "Come on, Binkie, we'll go for a swim. But it's too much trouble to take Betty; I'll tie her up to see how she likes it."

And, to her horror, Betty was dragged off outside by her ear and tied up by a tight collar and a short piece of rope. Sobbing with anger she watched Binkie and Dick run down the road to the sea.

How long and hot that afternoon seemed! And when the truants came running back chattering about the good time they had had, she cried with vexation. They passed in, leaving her, and soon savory smells came floating out from dinner.

Very late Dick came out carrying some dry biscuits in his mouth, which he dropped in front of her. How hard her bed and biscuits seemed, as she lay shivering and hungry in the dirty kennel. (She herself had forgotten to clean it.)

At last she dozed off and all of a sudden, bump! Betty had fallen out of her real bed.

The first thing she did the next morning was to run down and unchain Dick, feed him and clean out his house. Then and there she determined that never again would she treat her pets other than she would treat herself.

THE BABY BIRDS

By Violet Payne
Age 12

One day when I was walking down the road towards home with three other girls we came under a big oak tree. I saw four baby birds lying in a nest that had fallen from the tree. The nest was broken and kept the birds little warmer than if they were on the cold ground. They were cold, so I picked them up and took them to where the other girls were waiting. When they saw that I had something they ran to meet me. When they saw what I had they exclaimed: "Oh, how cunning!" They all asked if they could help take care of them. We hurried home with them to put them in a warm place and feed them. We put them into a warm box and we fed them some bread and milk. They opened their mouths, for they were very hungry. We fed them well and then they went to sleep.

The other girls came over to see them and to feed them very often. Each one of us claimed one and so we each made a pet of the one we had claimed. They made very good pets. Soon as the birds knew how to fly and take care of themselves we let them go. They were such pets that they never would go far away from the house. We always fed them when they came close to the house.

THE PUPPY AND THE CRAB

Publicity Drive

An interesting special session of the Carmel Chamber of Commerce was held on Thursday evening at the city hall.

Over twenty members were present and listened most attentively to the remarks of E. R. Duprey, who is here from the California Development Board, managing the six weeks educational campaign of Monterey Peninsula Inc.

Allen Griffin explained at length the functions of the new organization —the character of the publicity to be put out, taking into account the fact that the communities of Monterey are dissimilar in character and ideals.

K. Hovden, already selected by Monterey and Pacific Grove as Colonel for the main drive committee, was endorsed by Carmel. The major for all Carmel will be John B. Jordan. There will be two districts here—north of Ocean avenue, with Captain H. P. Glassell and Lieutenants R. G. Leidig and C. O. Goold; and south of Ocean avenue, with Captain C. C Hogle and Lieutenants T. L. Edler and R. C. DeYoe.

The first big mass meeting in the interest of Monterey Peninsula Inc. will be held in the Monterey Theatre next Tuesday night. Transportation will be provided for those without autos; leave names at Pine Cone office. Speakers at the meeting will be Peter Clark Macfarlane, Col J. M. Jenkins and Dr. Cottrell. The Presidio band will be on hand and there will be community singing. Get there.

The Masterless Dogs

By Theodora Gay Flanner

As I lay one winter night
Before the embers' dying light
On a lonely, distant shore
With the mountains pallid, sere,
Rising ever gray and drear,
Like a phantom near my door,
Like a phantom in a cloud,
Wrapped in vaporous, clinging shroud,
There suddenly came cries, loud,
Demon cries, my soul dismaying!
Was it beast upon me preying?
Fleeing down the lonely shore,
Coming nearer to my door;
And I trembled in affright
As I peered into the night,
Peered beneath the stars' pale light.
Then from out the shadows leaping,
With demoniac howling, sweeping
Onward down the lonely shore—
Coyotes in their hurrying flight,
Leaping, crying through the night.
Thus they passed beyond my door—
In the starlights' golden gleaming,
Left me to fantastic dreaming.

Takes a Fling at Yellow Journalism

The Santa Cruz News knocks the San Francisco newspapers on the knuckles for their predilection in making mountains out of the molehills of "small town" happenings and never playing up the big things that occur in the smaller cities.

F'rinstance, the funny antics of an intoxicated cow at Monterey the other day was considered of enough importance for a first page story in our big-brother contemporaries, but on the other hand the really big things that are all the time happening in this community rarely get a raise out of those selfish metropolitan newspapers.

There's something big going on here almost every day on the Monterey peninsula but they rarely get any mention except from the local newspapers, and that as likely as not no comment or commendation is made by local people unless they see it in the big city sheets. Recently there was a presentation of the "Crucifixion" in Pacific Grove that would have been a credit to San Francisco, or any other Californian city. We have the Hopkins Marine Station here at Pacific Grove with its hundreds of students, that many a larger city would be proud to say was located in their place. And Asilomar, the great Young Woman's Christian Association national retreat grounds, than which there is no other to be compared with it, and growing year by year in importance and influence.

We have here in Pacific Grove the only Sunday reverent resort in California. We have here in Pacific Grove the only boat building plant between San Francisco and Los Angeles.

We do not "holler" about them all the time, but we might do so with interest and profit. What we have here in Pacific Grove are only a few of the enterprises in this community worthy of exploiting in our own newspapers as well as in the metropolitan journals.

Taking our own little city, with historic old Monterey, Carmel-by-the-Sea, Pebble Beach, Del Monte, Seaside—why, we have enough to brag about in front page stories without enlarging on the antics of a tipsy cow that got her booze from some destroyed bottles of bootleg carelessly thrown where she happened to drink some without knowing that she was doing anything wrong. —Pacific Grove Review.

There will be a special tea at the home of Mrs. R. W. Covington, Camino Real and 18th, next Friday, 4 to 6, for the benefit of St. Anne's Guild.

All's well when you patronize the Mission Tea House — whether for lunch, tea or dinner. They are all perfectly satisfactory, so be considerate and bring your friends. adv.

2. The park spaces on Ocean Avenue between Junipero Avenue and Monte Verde Street, shall be graded, so as to present an even slope between the two pavements.

3. The park spaces on Ocean Avenue between Monte Verde Street and San Antonio Avenue, shall be graded, a width, sufficient to make the height of said park spaces where they abut the pavement, the same as the heighth of the pavement, and to have a gradual slope away from said pavement. All to be done to the lines and grades shown on that certain grade map for said street filed in the office of the City Clerk of said city on February 1st, 1921.

SELLING A COMMONWEALTH

It is not an exaggeration to say that the Californians Inc. campaign inaugurated by San Francisco has not only concentrated a large part of the attention of the nation on California and opened the eyes of the nation to California's vast resources and opportunities but that it has had the effect of awakening the entire state and of creating at home a spirit of enthusiasm for California that was not apparent when this campaign was started.

A total of more than 100,000 inquiries in the space of little more than four months since the first advertisement of the campaign was published sets a new record in the history of community advertising. Liberal estimates made by advertising experts at the beginning of the campaign figured upon 75,000 inquiries as a result of a year's advertising. This figure was reached and passed in the third month of the campaign. It is now estimated that before the present campaign of national newspaper and magazine advertising is closed next June a total of 150,000 inquiries, or prospects, will be on file in the offices of Californians Inc.

Monterey Peninsula Inc. will operate much along the lines of Californians Inc. The enthusiasm and hard work now prevailing here must not be allowed to lag for an instant. If ever there was a chance to cash in on what we have that time is now.

COMMUNITY SPIRIT VS. CLIQUES

In times gone by many people formed a certain prejudice against small town life, because they had the misfortune to live in places that were dominated by petty cliques.

If there were three or four churches in such a town, each might have its own distinct section of people. In each group there would be the older folks, the middle aged and young married people, and the young set. Frequently these groups did not mix.

Then there might be the card playing crowd, the dancing set, the literary folks, etc. Some people considered themselves better than others and held aloof. The town would be cut up into many divisions and sub-divisions. The various cliques were often jealous of each other. People did not know each other well, and did not form many friendships outside their own crowd. This spirit paralyzed progressive community movements. Each set was so small that it could not organize any general effort for pleasant social life.

Recent years have seen much of this clique spirit dying out. People still have their separate church and society interests. But they have seen more of the world and of life, and are inclined to laugh at petty jealousies. They feel, in progressive communities at least, that the community should be one big family, in which all work heartily together for town progress, and to organize pleasant activities and diversions.

This spirit is making places like Carmel delightful residence towns. Where people all know each other, and work together well, it becomes possible to make rapid civic and economic progress. Community life is pervaded with the spirit of jolly friendliness and hearty comradeship, and pleasures of social intimacy are enjoyed that are not found in the individualistic life of bigger places.

Passion Play in Two Cities

The Passion Play of Santa Clara to be produced at the University of Santa Clara April 27, and for several days following, and later at the Civic Auditorium in San Francisco, did not come into being in a day. And if it lives for centuries as a part of the life of this community, as has the Passion Play of Oberammergau, those who are familiar with the play and the method of its production would not be greatly surprised.

In 1901 the University of Santa Clara celebrated its golden jubilee, and for that celebration Clay M. Greene of the class of 1889 wrote "The Passion Play of Santa Clara," and dedicated it to the late Rev. Robert E. Kenna, then president of the university and a former classmate of Mr. Greene.

Clay M. Greene, brother of Harry Greene of Monterey, was peculiarly fitted to write the play, for not only was he familiar with the spirit and traditions of the college, but he was a writer of note and had even been on the stage for some time. He has for years been a member of the Lambs' Club of New York City and now lives in San Francisco, where he is engaged in journalism. He is also the author of "St. John of Nopomuk," a play written for and produced by the Bohemian Club of San Francisco.

Little Theatre Competition

New York will see an interesting experiment during the month of May when thirty Little Theater groups will compete in a week-long tournament.

Fifteen plays will be presented on the first five nights of the week, and from these the judges will select three as the best of the lot. These three will be presented at the Saturday performances and the final decision as to the best of them all will be announced Saturday night. Of course, fifteen different groups will contribute the plays, each program being made up of three one-act plays. The winner will be presented with a standard, gift of David Belasco, which will be held until the next competition.

This shows something of the force and power of the Little Theater movement and its growing place in the world of the stage.

He Wins Both Ways

To have built up two widely recognized names in the literature of the country has been the experience of Ray Stannard Baker, reporter, author and novelist. Mr. Baker has a dual personality as a writer.

Under his own name he has scored many successes through his authorship of articles and books on historical, scientific and economic subjects.

Under the pseudonym of David Grayson he has written five books, delightful pastoral essays and stories which have won recognition even where the name of Ray Stannard Baker is unknown.

"I sometimes feel a little jealous of the popularity of 'David Grayson,' said Mr. Baker recently, when he was asked regarding this dual literary personality, "but under the circumstances, I can bear it."

Mr. Baker made a trip into the Middle West during the autumn of 1922. A secondhand book dealer, in one of the university cities which he visited, was telling one of his customers that when a person asked his recommendation of a book to be presented for Christmas, he always suggested one of David Grayson's volumes.

"He is going to speak here tonight," remarked the customer.

"Who?" asked the book dealer.

"Why, Ray Stannard Baker," came the customer's reply.

"What's that got to do with David Grayson?"

"Everything! Don't you know that Mr. Baker and Mr. Grayson are the same person?"

SPLASHES

One of Murillo's greatest paintings, "The Assumption," is hidden away in Guadalajara, Mexico. It is valued at more than $400,000 and is held by the church of that city. It is still in the city but has been hidden since the revolution.

Probably the most influential woman in the motion picture industry today is June Mathis. This well known writer seems to be the head and shoulders of the Goldwyn organization at present, and rumor says her word is law and is final upon every angle of every production being made.

Friends and correspondents of the late Professor Barret Wendell of Harvard University who have in their possession letters from him which might serve a biographical purpose are asked to send them, in their original form or in copies, to Mr. M. A. DeWolfe Howe, 8 Arlington street, Boston. The originals will be promptly returned on request, after the transcription of passages that might be used in connection with the volume, to be made up largely of Professor Wendell's characteristically vivid letters, on which Mr. Howe is now at work.

Special luncheon, dinner and tea parties at the Mission Tea House may be arranged for. Phone 907-W-4. adv.

Wealth of Material and Distinguished Co-operation for Peninsula Exploitation

Fred A. Purner of the Del Monte Properties Company has prepared a splendid article setting forth in detail the steps leading to the organization of Monterey Peninsula Inc. and the plans along which the body will function.

Mr. Purner's article follows:

Preliminary Steps

For the past four months we have been working on the Monterey Peninsula on a plan of "Publicity by Co-operation," and in the hope that it may be of information and instruction to the Coast Counties Chambers of Commerce, I will briefly outline our plan of organization and operation which has been approved and sanctioned by the Chambers of Commerce of Monterey, Pacific Grove and Carmel.

We are going to incorporate for non-profit under the name of "Monterey Peninsula, Incorporated." The purpose of this organization is to advertise and publicize the Monterey Peninsula as a whole. The affairs of "Monterey Peninsula, Incorporated," will be directed by a board of ten directors, consisting of three appointed from the members of the Monterey Chamber of Commerce, three from the Pacific Grove Chamber, two from the Chamber at Carmel, one from the Monterey Peninsula Industrial Exposition and one from the Del Monte Properties Company.

We have decided to raise a fund of from $18,000 to $25,000 which will be devoted to operating "Monterey Peninsula, Incorporated," for a period of one year and we hope that the results will be so directly pronounced that the organization will become a permanent one and its operation be extended each succeeding year. We have a representative from the California Development Association to direct the campaign to secure the co-operation of everyone on the Peninsula.

Plan of Operation

The plan of operation which we decided on and which was approved by the chambers of commerce was for Monterey Peninsula, Inc., to employ a capable manager experienced in publicity and civic development work. This manager is to have an office at some central place on the Monterey Peninsula from which he will send out his publicity and conduct the affairs of the organization. It is planned to spend $5000 or $6000 in preparing and publishing literature. It has not been definitely decided what forms this literature will take but it has been suggested that we have a de-luxe booklet with the heading: "Why I Live on Monterey Peninsula," and we have talked over asking such famous writers as Sam Blythe, Gouverneur Morris, Harry Leon Wilson and others of equal fame, all residents of the Peninsula, to write us about 400 or 500 words each, and we plan to illustrate the booklet with reproductions of paintings of scenes on and about the Peninsula.

The committee has talked in general on other forms of literature such as would attract the interest of home-seekers and those looking for business opportunities.

A Definite Program

It has been definitely decided that the manager of Monterey Peninsula, Incorporated, will be given two or three months in order to thoroughly acquaint himself with our locality and he would then start his campaign of publicity to deal with the Monterey Peninsula as a whole; that is, he would prepare stories for newspapers and magazines on the romantic and historic points of interest, statistics on climate, beauty of scenery and strive always to make known the advantages of living and working on the Monterey Peninsula so it will come to the attention of the traveling public and to attract industries.

Our feature events such as Monterey Peninsula Exposition, the Carmel plays in the open air theater, the Feast of Lanterns in Pacific Grove, in fact any event of note would be advertised through the medium of publicity and to enlist the co-operation of all points on the Peninsula.

Later on, when we are thoroughly organized, we plan to devote a substantial sum of money to advertising in the daily newspapers of Los Angeles during the fall and winter months with the idea of attracting the interest of the many visitors who come to California at that season of the year, and build up our dull season.

The committee has clearly defined that the work of Monterey Peninsula, Incorporated, will be devoted exclusively to advertising and publicity and will interfere in no way with the routine business of the chambers of commerce in the several cities. It will be "publicity by co-operation" by all points uniting, and it is figured that greater results will be obtained than by individual handling of advertising and publicity.

Experience Shows Much

I know from my experience of four and a half years at the Hotel Del Monte that publicity can be placed, if properly written, in newspaper and magazine style. There is a wealth of material on the Monterey Peninsula and newspapers and magazines are only too pleased to run stuff if it is furnished them.

To give you an idea of the extent of such publicity, I can cite some figures in connection with the Hotel Del Monte's publicity operations. Our clippings from Allen's Press Clipping Bureau is evidence that we get in an average of over 350 items per month on Del Monte and these include only daily newspapers of large circulation and weekly and monthly publications. We average over 100 additional items per month in out-of-state publications. We figure that it is the best possible form of advertising to get the name of Del Monte before the public, and we are banking on getting even greater results with Monterey Peninsula, Incorporated, which will have the sanction of the chambers of commerce and civic bodies as well as city authorities on the Monterey Peninsula.

During the course of the year an average of 16,000 to 18,000 people register at Hotel Del Monte. About 40 per cent of these come from out-of-state and foreign points. It occurs to me that the coast counties should be brought to the attention of these prominent people, and Monterey Peninsula could also be greatly exploited.

Bells Interest Both Collector and Poet

Practically every youth passes through the stage of collecting—stamps, coins, autographs, if he be esthetic; fishhooks, tops and marbles, if he be but human. It is an instinct of youth, and it may be indicative of our youth as a nation that many of the finest collections in the world are found in America.

A curious and unique American collection is a garden of bells, attractively arranged at Glenwood Mission Inn, California. Mr. Frank A. Miller, its collector, became protector of the bells when his daughter gave him, as a Christmas present, in 1905, a curious bell with the Medici coat-of-arms. Historical objects had a fascination for Mr. Miller, and this bell appealed to his imagination and opened to him the large possibilities in old bells of various ages and countries and peoples.

His quest led him to all parts of the world. Bells are very often remelted, and it was in visits to foundries that he discovered and rescued from oblivion many of his most interesting and valuable bells.

To the poet the bell has always had a distinct fascination. Too often taken for granted, the bell has long played an important role in the life of civilization. Poe has perhaps expressed most realistically the place various bells have in our lives, and how much more was this true in the lives of our forefathers, when bells were used far more than now.

Sleigh bells—who hears them now? The little tinkling bell over shop doors. Church bells—they grow more and more silent with the years. The milkman's bell. The little bell that stood on the teacher's desk. Cowbells. Bells on the horses that pulled the street cars.

A change has come over our way of living, and this change, to a great extent, has marked the passing of the bell. In its place we have numerous and divers whistles and electric bells. So the old bell, with its beauty or eccentricity of form, its careful workmanship and interesting inscription, and its variety of tone, is being relegated to the scrap heap of civilization. It is, therefore, with pride that we learn that America boasts, in the Glenwood Mission Inn, the largest collection of bells in the world.—Dearborn Independent.

A Youthful Poet

Much verse is submitted to the editor of the Pine Cone. Some of it is published. This week we take pleasure in presenting to our readers two poems by Katherine Stephens of San Jose. The poems are the more interesting when it is considered that the author is but 14 years of age.

STAR OF THE EVENING

Star of the evening,
Abide with me
Under the shadows
Of the tall pine tree;
Trees that whisper
Of such wonderful things
That their songs and lullabys
Float uponward on wings.

Star of the evening,
Send me your light,
That I may not fear
The darkness of night;
Night with its darkness
And whispering trees,
Nights with its fragrance
And swift coming breeze.

Star of the evening,
Guard over me
That I may rest
In quiet and peace;
Peace, where the angels
Watch over all,
Peace, where the pine trees
Stand straight and tall.

A STORM AT SEA

Darkness settled low upon the waves,
The wind tossed the foaming billows high,
The plants were torn from their nature deep
And thrown on the sand, to die.

Each bolt of Jove tore across the sky,
The thunder mingled with the mighty din;
Both went on with maddening rage,
Each expecting the battle to win.

Mighty waves dashed on the towering rocks,
The sea-gull's nest was torn from its hold;
But still this restless, seething mass
Its greatest barriers, enfold.

Among the guests were Colonel Beverly Brown, Major and Mrs. Milliken, Major Strong and Captain Joseph Swing. Mrs. Stanton has returned to San Francisco.

The extraordinary durability of the ancient Egyptian mummy cloth is believed to be due to the fact that it was finished with a vegetable blue derived from the African locust bean tree.

Carmel Welcomes Return of It's Mayor

After many weeks' absence in San Jose, Mayor Perry Newberry and wife have returned to Carmel.

"The Beggar of Bagdad" is still awaiting production. Chiefly owing to the illness of Thomas Vincent Cator, joint author with Newberry of this promising light opera, it has been found necessary to call off the production in San Jose. Also it was found that the woman's club under whose auspices the opera was to be presented was not co-operating to any extent.

However, it may be fortunate for Perry and Tom that the show has not gone on, as it is understood that several big producers are in the market to purchase the opera in toto.

Fine speakers and good music at Monterey Peninsula Inc. mass meeting, Monterey Theatre, next Tuesday night.

HONOR

Honor is the cornerstone of human relationship; it is the bond that is paid, the trust revered, the promise kept. It is the imperative command of conscience.

In business honor is a guiding star. It is the guardian of ideals, the preserver of fair dealing, the open door to confidence.

In this store honor is observed, obligation and responsibility are fostered; our word is good.

Chamber of Commerce Holds Busy Session

The Carmel Chamber of Commerce is finding plenty to do. The monthly meeting last week was a session in which much important business was transacted.

Communications were discussed and action taken on them as they were read, as follows:

No recommendation was made concerning the establishment of a night theater bus service between here and Monterey.

The proposal to establish the Bank of Carmel was endorsed.

All letters received by the chamber asking for information about Carmel will be turned over to Monterey Peninsula, Inc.

In the matter of a business license ordinance, soon to be enacted by the city council, a committee consisting of Bernard Wetzel, R. G. Leidig and L. S. Slevin was appointed to make recommendations.

The secretary was directed to communicate with the county board of supervisors concerning the abolition of advertising signs on the roads and highways.

The chamber desires that cement sidewalks be laid in front of all business property on Ocean avenue, and the secretary will so inform the city trustees.

It is the recommendation of the chamber to the city planning commission that the business zone be extended to include Blocks S, T and C1.

Two bills now before the state legislature were endorsed. One provides for the creation of the office of public defender in this county; the other for legislation that will permit of the condemnation of land for dumping garbage.

Consideration of the city manager plan of government was deferred until the regular meeting in May.

The approach of the summer season, when there will be much additional traffic, prompted the body to recommend to the city trustees the repair of the following streets: Santa Lucia, Mountain View, San Antonio near toll gate, Carmelo, Monte Verde, North Camino Real, Scenic Drive past Forest Hill School.
